was a senior in high school that he finally decided to go into the teaching field, and what drove him in the direction of being an English teacher was the chance to be unique. “I think one of the big reasons why I like English is just because it has so much freedom,” said Mr. Lilienthal. He said subjects like history and math have answers that are fixed in stone. “But with English, you have a lot of freedom. You can write about a lot of different things, and you can also bring a lot of the different things that you’re writing about and build connections to your own life, which I think is really interesting with English.” Mr. Lilienthal said that he found a lot of enjoyment in student teaching and being able to build connections with the students. He said that is one of the things that excites him about teaching, even if it isn’t the highest paying profession. “You never really know what to expect every single day; whereas if you’re working in an office job where you’re kind of doing the same thing, it can get repetitive, and it can kind of wear you down in a way,” said Mr. Lilienthal. Mr. Lilienthal added that if pay is a concern, you could always get your master’s degree and make more, which he plans to do. He also wants to coach. Mr. Lilienthal is well aware of the teacher shortage and said even when he would tell people he was going to become a teacher, they would always point out the clear deterrent. “Whenever I bring it up to anyone else that I was going to be a teacher, everyone automatically thinks of just the pay and how they don’t want to do it because they’re not going to get paid enough, which I don’t necessarily agree that should be the reason why you wouldn’t want to do something, but it’s definitely a factor.” Mr. Lilienthal also said that teachers come under stress from many sources and have to develop “thick skin.” Mr. Lilienthal believes that it is extremely important to encourage students who are considering going into the teaching field to pursue it. “I was kind of on the fence my senior year of high school. And then I got to talk to a couple other teachers while I was there [at Durant], and they kind of told me to look into education,” Mr. Lilienthal stated.

Can’t tell you how much we’ve enjoyed the ride! Can’t wait to see what’s next!
